

A close-up view of a terrazzo floor. The background is a light beige or off-white matrix. Scattered throughout are numerous small, irregular chips of various colors and textures. The most prominent colors are black and dark grey, but there are also several pieces of a vibrant green, possibly malachite or similar mineral. Some chips are larger and more angular, while others are smaller and more fragmented. The overall appearance is that of a classic, multi-colored terrazzo finish.
